

Creative Block

Call it a New Year's resolution if you like, but I am embarking on a new, exciting creative venture. Details will be coming as they progress. Let's just say that I am planning to put my gifts to good use here in the near future. As I have been pondering how best to use these gifts, I have been brainstorming A LOT but am having a bit of an issue with actually turning these ideas into something concrete and worthwhile.

On my other ongoing pursuit, my voice lessons continue to prosper. As I expected, one of the hardest pieces (ok... THE MOST difficult) is one that is quite deceptive. Literally beating my head over it ☐ Rather reminiscent of that little School House Rock show I was involved in a few years ago.

Songs you grew up with but when you are faced with performing them, they present quite a challenge. However, whoever said that I did anything easy? I'm always up for a challenge.

Otherwise, everything else seems to be passing for whatever is normal for my family. No one has been checked into the "Hilton" since New Year's Eve and he Jeff was released Monday in time to watch the Buckeyes flounder. Now thanks to some great decisions made by a previous coach and members of the team past and present, OSU will not be eligible for post-season football for another year.

Hope everyone has rung in 2012 safely, healthy, and lovingly.